Confidential Comments to the Editor

The data presented by the author still does not reflect a grounded theory research. The author needs to explain more specifically the characteristics and dimensions of each existing code to find a new concept.

Comments to the Author

Abstract:

1. Background exposure in the abstract section (first and second sentences) tends to convey the same idea so it is less effective. This can be seen by using the conjunction "but and yet".
2. It is necessary to replace the qualitative approach with grounded theory research to make it more interesting and clearly describe the research being carried out.

Introduction: Originality in this research has not been seen, especially since many studies related to similar topics have been studied.

Methods:

1. There are contradictory statements regarding sampling where nurses are selected who have two years of experience but are not presented with the criteria of the selected students. The author also needs to add criteria from nursing students.
2. The choice of data collection method if it only comes from in-depth interviews will be incomplete, it would be better to include an observation method, especially since this study discusses the interpretation and needs of adults regarding nonverbal communication by nurses.
3. Ethical consideration would be better if it displays the ethical license number in question along with the source.

Results:

1. The results of the research are presented by presenting direct quotes from the results of interviews with informants. The presentation of the results is no different from presenting the research results in a raw manner, it would be better if the writing method was improved with a standard writing style. For example, which expresses a negative interpretation of nurses' non-verbal communication related to time, the author presents several pieces of interview results that support the related topic without mixing it with other topics. This of course also makes it easier for readers to understand the information conveyed by the author.
2. The interview results presented are still general. Need to dig more specifically and in detail related to the points presented. For example, elderly patients say that they pay attention to the nurse's expressions when communicating. The author needs to explain more specifically what kind of expression and how is meant. This is also the case with waving hands, what kind of hand waves, how long, and the intensity. The author details the characteristics and dimensions according to the existing code categories in order to obtain new data and findings that reflect the grounded theory method used in this study.
3. It is necessary to add a description of the needs of non-verbal communication carried out by nurses at each stage of interaction with the elderly, for example at the pre-interaction, interaction, and termination stages.
4. The author should combine the logic of deductive and inductive thinking to find new things from existing concepts. The presentation of the results seems to be led to an existing concept even though there should be unique things found by the researchers, especially this research is grounded theory which was carried out with in-depth interviews.

Discussion:

1. It is necessary to clarify the meaning of the sentence which says that the research results are in line with the review related to NVC with citations (Author, 2020) on page 14 line 53. This is to illustrate clarity in citations.
2. The results obtained have not led to new concepts and should convey concepts that are more applicable for nurses to use in communicating with the elderly.
3. Because the limitations of non-verbal communication during the pandemic are the recommendations of this study, it is better if sentences related to the limitations of communication during the pandemic (Page 17 line 13) should be accompanied by citations.
